GIRLS WERE SINGED.

In Fire in Apartments of Royal Curtain Co.

Boston, April 17.—A burst of flames from an elevator shaft into the apartment occupied by about a score of young women employees of the Royal Curtain company on the fifth floor of the building at the junction of Bedford and Summer streets at about 1:30 o'clock yesterday was the first warning that fire had broken out in the building. So suddenly did the flames leap forth that they actually singed the hair of some of the young women who were near the shaft.

There was a wild rush for stairways, but the panic was over in a minute, mainly because some of the male employees succeeded in directing a number of the girls to the fire escapes and thus prevented the exit from becoming choked. The fire was confined to the upper part of the structure, but water caused considerable damage to the occupants of the lower floors. The cause of the fire has not as yet been ascertained.
